A sensitive FIR is handled confidentially because it involves serious offences, minors, sexual crimes, public figures, or cases that require protection of privacy and investigation secrecy. The process begins when information about a cognizable offence is given to the police, after which the FIR is drafted and a Crime Register (CR) number is issued. In sensitive matters, the SSP/Commissioner gives the final approval before the FIR is processed further. Once approved, the concerned police station conducts the investigation by collecting evidence, recording statements, and maintaining confidentiality throughout the case. After completing the investigation, the police station submits the charge-sheet to the court while ensuring the sensitive FIR remains restricted and secure.
